

is le'
HER LIFE

Priya Mulji

Follow Priya Mulji on www.twitter.com/priyamulji or log onto www.priyamulji.com

The man experiment part two

MEN can be cowards when it comes to dating. They will go on a date, but when it comes to turning a woman down, they lose their integrity. When I asked on social media why men do this, most said it was because they didn't want to hurt a girl's feelings.

I think that it is absolute rubbish. It takes two minutes to write that text and honestly women will appreciate this more.

Last week, I told you that I recently conducted an experiment where I chose three men and took different approaches with them to see if there was any truth in the saying that 'if you treat men mean, you will keep them keen'.

With Boy A, I was myself. I was very mean to Boy B and really nice to Boy C.

All communication was carried out via text or phone and the experiment lasted three weeks. And at the end of that time, I realised that being rude did actually keep Boy B interested.

Of course there will be exceptions to all the rules, but generally girls, if you want a man then be mysterious. I hate playing the game, but sometimes you just have to.

So this is what happened:

Boy A: I started chatting to him from Tinder. I would just talk to him normally, flirt and be nice but never suggested meeting. He was nice back, complimented me but never asked or arranged to meet. Eventually he stopped texting.

Boy B: I met him organically and we went on a date, but I wasn't interested in him. I took ages to reply to his messages and sometimes I didn't bother. I was mean, rude and when he said he wanted to meet up, I said no. When he called, I was sarcastic to him. Basically, I was not very nice. To this day, he wants to meet up.

Boy C: I got in contact with him through a dating website. He was a nice guy. We chatted for a bit and were trying to arrange to meet. With him I was super nice. When we first started chatting, we really got on. Then as part of my experiment I started texting him, saying nice things and trying to arrange to meet. All the communication stopped and I did not hear from him again.

And there is my proof – if you treat a man mean, you will definitely keep them keen. Men love the thrill of the chase; and though they complain when women play hard to get, because men have been programmed that way for years, they will always ultimately be cavemen.

Of course, my experiment could have been flawed in so many ways, but the results don't lie. So women, if a man shows that they are interested in you, then let them chase you. And they are obviously chasing you for a reason – they see something in you that they want. Embrace that, play on it a little and of course, enjoy the ride.

If they don't chase you, then you know they are just not that into you. If that happens, move on, looking like the beautiful, carefree goddess that you are.